Nonmelanoma skin cancer (NMSC) is the most common cancer in the USA, with 1.5 million new cases diagnosed annually. Keratinocyte hyperproliferation is a major risk factor for the development of NMSC. Two of the major molecular pathways implicated in the development of skin cancer involve the EGFR and KIT receptor tyrosine kinases. Mutations of the EGFR gene are a cause of FGFR3-negative, EGFR-positive craniosynostosis-related fibroblastomas and non-desmoplastic infantile fibromatosis, and KIT mutations cause a very malignant form of skin carcinoma called gastrointestinal stromal tumor. A high incidence of breast cancer in NMSC patients may be related to a high rate of concordance for the presence of breast cancer in twins. Protease-activated receptors, particularly PAR2, may be important in skin cancer development and a chemoprevention trial for APC gene mutation carriers is underway. Other inherited factors that may play a role in the development of NMSC include the pro-opiomelanocortin (POMC) gene and mutations of the p53 tumor suppressor gene. if((op & 0x40000000) == 0) // if bit 31 return false; } return true;

New Features of.Q: Are there any standard methods to set up a continuous integration server/buildserver? Our teams are pretty well set up with our own continuous integration. We have a buildserver, and it uses Jenkins. Now we are starting up a few additional teams, and would like to start using the same buildserver we have in the existing teams. We are considering whether we should use git, because we can use the hooks (commit, push, etc.) from git in order to send the build/test results back to the buildserver. However, git is not really used to version control the code. We are wondering if there are any more standard approaches to be used for version control. I'm not sure if this question should be on serverfault 3da54e8ca3
